TRIA TEK LIGHTING Becomes Lumisys, Launches New Website

(Atlanta, GA) – TRIA TEK Lighting announced this week that the company will change its name and will do business as Lumisys.

“Lumisys more accurately reflects the core competencies that our company possesses,” said Ron Poskevich. “Our company offers lighting control that is exclusively built for integration with building automation systems. This revolutionary approach unleashes sustainable system performance, eliminates waste, and returns unmatched product endurance throughout the building life cycle. Building owners are demanding a superior alternative to stand-alone lighting control, for many reasons, and we are fulfilling that demand.”

The Lumisys product line will include the same great products that customers came to expect from them in the past. The company’s flagship product, L35 Series relay panels, offers the latest relay technology to provide superior relay life, manual override, and individual relay replacement. “We have a number of exciting announcements that we hope to share in the near future about new product developments that will advance and broaden our already healthy product line,” said Poskevich.

The company also announced this week the launch of a new website www.lumisys1.com. The Lumisys1 website will provide 24 hour access to product details and specifications, integration architectures, and account information. The company plans several major website improvements over the next few months including, web casts, interactive documentation, product tutorials, case studies, and much more.

“For over two decades, our clients have come to expect great service and technical expertise from our well trained and very capable staff. This tradition of support will continue for all customers - past, present and future. New installations will now bear the name Lumisys to reflect the integration of lighting with the building automation system,” said Poskevich.
